

The Sporthorses and the Guggenheim Box

Three cubic metres of complete surveillance, no Big Brother, but a lot of sound, dance and fun: Instead of storing Big Data, The Sporthorses use their sensors to produce the most volatile possible output: Music.

A thrilling concert-show with a DIY electronic installation. The main instrument is the Guggenheim Box, being equipped with 28 lightbarriers and many sensors. Dancing, jumping and airdrumming: The Sporthorses generate electronic music by crossing light barriers.

A performance full of energy and madness raising questions about our use and awareness of technology and an invitation to take on responsibility.

Electronic sounds to make your dancing shoes move, your heart gallop and your imaginary spaceship take off!

After the Show: You rock the Box

About

The Guggenheim-Box was born in 2016. Since its invention by Jonas Guggenheim it has been extended by the busy hooves and brains of the Sporthorses to a multifunctional, magical musicmachine with lots of shenanigans and completed with selfmade electronic instruments such as a twostring violin, sliding daisy the guitar, a one-string bass, centipedy the mechanical sequencer, filterstations or flashing sugar boxes Blinksy.

Since the first touring in 2017, the Sporthorses have constantly worked on their program and performed a different show every year at festivals and venues in Switzerland, Netherlands, France, Germany, Luxembourg and Austria.

2021 the Sporthorses will be touring with The Guggenheim Box 3.0 in a fresh appearance. Lots of new features, more sensors and striking light decoration. There are four sporthorses performing an energetic mixture of music, dance and visual arts.

The Show is performed by four Sporthorses:

*Jonas Guggenheim, Andrea Kirchhofer, Jonas Arnet, Leonie Herlach
sometimes Maja Brönnimann, Thierry Kuster, Arnaud Duvoux, Benno Ernst*
